The Midwest Industries AR-15 Gas block has been combined with the company's AR-15 Flip-up Combat Sights, giving users a solid sighting solution that's integrated with the company's bombproof gas block. Having a solid set of back-up iron sights on an AR-15 is a must-have for today's shooters, ensuring that they can remain ready to roll, even if their primary optic fails. The Midwest Industries sights are known for their durability, giving shooters the confidence they need to succeed. These sights are paired with the company's low-profile gas block, which are available to fit gas journals measuring .625, .750 or .936 inches. The Midwest Industries Gas Block attaches to these journal sizes with three steel setscrews for a solid, secure hold. The included sights can be had in 1.5 or 2 MOA adjustments on the front-sight posts, while the rear sights provide 0.5 MOA adjustments. The sights provide shooters with a familiar A2-style sight picture.
