ARFCOM's goals were simple in designing a case- they wanted to eliminate the tell-tale look of the traditional rifle case and minimize the case size while having enough room for a broken-down but fully-outfitted M4-style carbine. The AR-platform is versatile in many ways, but the ease with which it can be broken down is not one that is often taken advantage of in the design of a carry case. We designed our case around a 16" barreled upper receiver (including optics and BUIS), then made sure we had room for the lower receiver assembly, several 30rd magazines, a sling, cleaning kit, and even a light; all the basics you'd want to have with you if you were headed to the range, training, or in case of emergency. These heavy-duty padded cases are a mere 26x12x4" so they fit easily in your vehicle, stack easily, and offer generous protection from the elements and physical abuse. At the same time, they are easily configurable for your needs, and have room for your primary weapon along with a variety of accessories you may choose to carry with it. Case comes with 8 velcro straps for attaching your gear to the 3 rows of internal MOLLE loops, as well as 4 D-rings on the back to attach a shoulder strap. One side features a velcro area for attaching your own patches (By request, the AR15.com leather patch is no longer on these).
