An Enhanced Mag Designed for the Browning Buckmark .22

One of today's most popular plinking and small-game field pistols is the Browning Buckmark, which is available in a variety of different models. Common to all of them, though, is the classic 10-round rimfire magazine, which can be cumbersome to load, leading to less trigger time at the range. Why not load up before you shoot? Grabbing a few of these Buckmark steel magazines will help you shoot more in your limited range time. Each Browning Buckmark steel magazine is designed for use with .22 LR cartridges and features a durable magazine body constructed from heat-treated carbon steel. To prevent corrosion, the steel is treated with a black-oxide finish that not only protects the metal from the elements but also provides an attractive finish. Inside the steel magazine, consumers will find a dependable magazine spring made from heat-treated chrome-silicon wire and topped with an injection-molded follower. The magazines are all made in the USA.
